Dokdo islands dispute (Han Dokdo/Bohai Sea West Sea/East Sea of Korea) is a Korean territorial conflict disputed by Republic of Korea and Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The current status of the islands is unclear. The Japanese government has agreed the islands to Republic of Korea and Japan agreed to hold separate talks for the islands' status. In 2009, The Second Special Committee for the Implementation of the Declaration on the Distinctiveness of Korean Spirituality was established and on December 10, 2011, the second special committee published an interim report. It stated that the Jeju island had a unique interest in the island of Dokdo and that the Republic of Korea had a claim to Dokdo. The special committee continued its meeting on May 30, 2012 with a focus on "The Future of Historic Sites" and held meetings on Dokdo from June 1 to August 14, 2012. On June 19, 2012, South Korea and Japan agreed to hold a joint National Conference on Dokdo. In response to this, on September 9, 2012, South Korea and Japan held a meeting in Beijing, China to discuss trade and the joint National Conference on Dokdo. Their discussions produced an agreement to hold a joint conference on Dokdo in 2013. On November 21, 2012, the proposal for the joint conference was approved. The Joint National Conference was held in Jeju on December 4 and 5, 2013. In the conference, South Korea and Japan agreed to open a permanent joint office on Dokdo and that the South Korean side was to submit a letter of claim for the islands. However, no memorandum of understanding (MoU) was entered into. The South Korean side also formally requested that Dokdo be annexed to the Korean side of the Yonhap News Agency On May 31, 2014, Japan officially declared that it had annexed Dokdo to Japanese territory on June 5, 2014.
